of the web that we allow people to find each other, but in the process we lose all real contact with that individual person. We're very socially limited. We can gain some information about people from what they've written, but it's all information we need to make judgements about them and their personality based on a few (often superficial) facts. We all need to remember this. In an ideal world, a young girl would know the people we are all judging before we make an opinion about them. We all want people to feel welcome to come into our world, and we want the world to feel welcoming towards us. Let's teach our children that we are all one community, and not a class of strangers. -----mindstab This is nothing unique to China. See: [
